Q: How do I create an array of structures in C? I am struggling to create an array of structures in C. I wanted to create a list where each item is a Struct Item1 { int x; }

However, I do not know how to declare this in the most efficient manner. I can think of three ways to do this but they are all not good solutions. If anyone has any suggestions, they would be helpful.

Thank you! Option 1) typedef struct

Item1 { int x; } Item1_t; Item1_t items[] = { Item1_t }; Option 2) typedef struct { int x; } Item1; Item1 items[] = { Item1 }; Option 3)
typedef struct { int x; } Item1;
struct { Item1 item1; } items[] = { { Item1 } }; I have an exam in a week and I really need some help with this. Thank you! This is for a CS50 assignment. A: You should try to stick as close as possible to the underlying C99 types, e.g. #include typedef struct { uint8_t dummy;
int32_t num1; uint32_t num2;
uint8_t num3; } MyStruct; struct {
